Questions and Answers
The Photo Editor of the Evening Ledger will be pleased to answer questions relating to his department.

Due to great public demand, the moving picture showing war scenes in Europe, which have crowded the Forrest Theatre all this week, will be continued for another week.

The question of scenario writing and more particularly of selling scenarios already written, is occupying considerable space in the New York Sun, in which various correspondents are hammering each other with nouns, adjectives and other heavy artillery for which grammar is famous.

I am not looking for a job as scenario editor. I am a totally unknown American citizen, except in a limited zone, where I am known as something of an innocuous and a caller of the bluff of fakery and extravagant talkers.

Somebody else would get her. The whole American public demands her, you see, and reimburses us.

"But," continued Charles, still credulous, "is she the Eighth Wonder of the World?"

"No, No!" I replied. "Not a miracle! Not the Eighth Wonder, or anything like that. She's not even beautiful—a sort of magnetism, a little way you can't exactly describe—oh, well, Charles, you know how it is with your own wonderful star, Miss Blink."

"When I mentioned Miss Blink, who, like Miss Blink, must, of course, be nameless here," concluded Mr. Frohman, "Charles nearly fell over. But he dropped the subject."

Odds and Ends
Samuel Goldfish announces that the next Lasky-Belasco photodramatic offering, following the production of Edith Wynne Matheson in "The Governor's Lady," will be an all-star production in picture form of "The Woman."

It was a bitter cold day as Edison Director James W. Castle and his players motored into Larchmont, N. Y., in search for a certain kind of suburban home.

The Vitaphone Company has added a number of players to its stock membership who were prominent on the legitimate stage.

MUSIC

The concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra yesterday afternoon ran an undistinguished and pleasant and unpretentious course with nothing more exciting to make it memorable than the rising of the orchestra in the midst of Goldmark's symphony; that is, after the fourth of the five movements.

The symphony itself (Goldmark's "Runic Wedding") was of this pleasant, summer's afternoon character; it had lovely moments, but its chief tones were those of gaiety and charm and a little wantonness and ease.

"The Don Giovanni" which began, and which ended the concert, was a piece of music that the orchestra found each a place to sing sweetly. The wind and strings in the second and fourth movements, the strings in the dance, were pleasant to the ear.

Harold Randolph was the assisting artist of the concert, playing the lovely Beethoven concerto, previously heard this season at the hands of Harold Bauer.

Tomorrow evening is the eighth anniversary of the death of Fritz Schell. A wreath under the memorial plaque of the conductor will recall him to the devoted memory of lovers of the orchestra.

"L'Amore dei Tre Re"
Announcement is made by the Metropolitan Opera Company that the last but one opera of the local season will be given March 23, and will be Montemasse's "L'Amore dei Tre Re" (The Love of Three Kings), with Lucrezia Bori, Ferrari-Fontana, Amato and Didur, the interpreters who made this opera so splendid in New York last year.

Metropolitan) was that the company could not afford this year to lose money in venturesome novelties. Now the company has ventured, it is distinctly up to Philadelphia to see that neither money nor effort goes to waste.

The concert season droops and falls, music lovers of the city can concentrate on the excellence of orchestral offerings. This week there are two programs. Monday evening the Boston Symphony comes for the last time this year.

Next Friday's (and Saturday's) concert of the orchestra will begin with a chorale from Bach's cantata, "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme," and will end with Tchaikovsky's tremendous fifth symphony. Theodore Kuchar will sing an aria from Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," which is not "non piu andrai," but "Hai gia vinto la causa," and an aria from Verdi's "La Ballo in Maschera," where the first quous comes true, for it is, "Eri tu." Hugo Wolf's Italian serenade is the other number of this rich program.

The best comic opera of the season will continue at the Metropolitan Opera House during the week. "Yeoman of the Guard," "Sorcerer," "Trial by Jury," "Mikado" and "Iolanthe" are their names. Gilbert and Sullivan are their names and music comes true, for it is, "Eri tu." Hugo Wolf's Italian serenade is the other number of this rich program.

Newspaperman Honor Taylor
Director A. Merritt Taylor was the guest of honor of the newspapermen of Philadelphia last night at the Pen and Pencil Club. He paid a tribute to the members of the Fourth Estate and said that honesty, accuracy, vigilance and industry were the fundamental rules governing the operation of the daily publications of the city.

Incidentally, the last concert but one of the Philadelphia Orchestra will bring "Casals himself." The regret expressed in these columns that place could not be found for this master in the orchestra's concert happily turns out premature.

NEW OPERA COMPANY

Reorganization of Former Body of Artists Contemplated.

Negotiations have been opened with some of the leading stars whose contracts were affected by the war for the purpose of reorganizing the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Company. It was learned from an authoritative source today that the aggregation of expensive "song birds" will be reassembled next November, under the direction of Cleofonte Campanini.

Artists from abroad who have been able to command high salaries because of the scarcity of leading singers will have to be content with smaller offerings for the season now being arranged for, it is said. The "market" is said to be flooded with artists from France and Germany, and if Italy goes to war these singers will be augmented by Italian stars. It is declared in this city that chances for obtaining the best artists at great reductions over former salaries demanded were never better. Miss Mary Garden will be asked to join the proposed company.
